Fred McFerrin Russell was born on August 27, 1906 to Mabel Lee McFerrin and John E. Russell. Raised in Wartrace, Tennessee, Russell attended Vanderbilt University Law School, after briefly practicing law; he joined the Nashville Banner newspaper as a sports writer in 1929. Russell was named sports editor in 1930 and went on to be the vice-president of the paper in 1955 and was later named sports director in 1969. In 1981 Russell became sports writer emeritus working at the Nashville Banner until it ceased publication in 1998.

From 1949-1962, Russell wrote the "Pigskin Preview" for the Saturday Evening Post predicting the best teams in college football. He also wrote several books about sports and his life as a sports writer. They include: Fifty Years of Vanderbilt Football (1938), I'll Go Quietly (1944), I'll Try Anything Twice (1945), Funny Thing About Sports (1948), Vol Fest: Records, History, and Tales of the Nashville Baseball Club in the Southern Association 1901-1950 (1950), Big Bowl Football (1963) and the autobiographical Bury Me in an Old Press Box (1957).

Russell received many honors. He was awarded the Grantland Rice Memorial Award in 1955, was inducted into the Tennessee Sports Hall of Fame in 1974 and the National Sportscasters and Sportswriters Hall of Fame in 1988. Fred Russell died at the age of 96 on January 26, 2003 in Nashville, Tennessee and is buried at Mt. Olivet Cemetery.
